Introduction

The Star Wars collectibles covered by this book are not individually unique. They are mass-produced with prices and availability subject to the whims and desires of investment speculators, dealers, fans, and collectors.

The selling price of any given collectible can skyrocket during the clamoring and interest at the time of its initial release only to plateau and plummet once any mania turns to focus on the next marketing spotlighted piece. Hundreds of collectibles illustrate this principle by having sold for significantly more money initially and which aren't even worth their original retail price today. Not every piece of Star Wars merchandise is a diamond to be polished for an easy profit. On the other hand, a select few turn out to be pure gold.

Sellers and buyers each need to understand whether the going price for an item is due to popularity (short term) or desirability (prolonged duration). It means the difference between whether sales should be approached impulsively, or if patience will prove more profitable for the interested party.

Some collectors buy extra pieces to resell, which helps to finance their own habits. This brings up the question of who is a collector and who is a dealer. A true collector buys for long-term holding, perhaps 10 to 30 years. Dealers buy for the short-term, no more than 10 to 30 weeks. Many dealers also collect. Few collectors routinely deal.

Calculating values is tricky, which is why a printed guide is essential. As with any other investment choices, the strategy is the classic "buy low; sell high." So, should the value of an item be calculated based upon the lowest it can be obtained for by a nondescript buyer, or would it make more sense to report the value on the highest amount an established dealer could get for the piece? The debate has raged for years and often depends on whether the point of view is that of the buyer or that of the seller. Values expressed in this book are median, providing a baseline for buyers and sellers to adjust according to market, availability, and special grading considerations.

A determining factor to be made when establishing a specific price is whether or not the collectible is "investment grade." For every mass-produced item distributed, some become damaged, some acquire wear, some are opened for use or display, and a percentage remains sealed for the posterity of collecting. Of the last group of items most are "hobby grade."

Only a small percentage of those are truly investment grade. Investment grade collectibles have the ability to command a price greater than their published value. To illustrate, a vintage action figure with a value of a couple of hundred dollars could double or triple in price if it receives a top score from a professional grading house. Its increase in value has no effect on the value of equivalent condition action figures that have not been professionally graded.

Adding to the mystique of the mathematics of values is online trade and auction sites. It's rare to hear a person complain that they paid too much in a situation where they got to offer their own price to the seller. All too often when a bid is placed on an item, somebody else who values the item even more places a higher bid. The purpose of this type of transaction is for the buyer to obtain items at less than they are worth. Sellers may sacrifice the profit of true value for the sake of a quick turn of inventory, or to try to minimize their own losses on items. Items posted at below their value and receiving no bid whatsoever doesn't reduce the value of all alike pieces, it simply indicates current lack of the auction community's interest in the movement for that piece, or a flaw in the system such as when items are categorized or identified incorrectly.

Star Wars is a volatile market for speculation and acquisition. The property is too fast paced to capture more than a snapshot of the market. New merchandise is released every month worldwide for collectors and fans to search out. There is a huge secondary market right below the retail level, which seems to specialize in obtaining the highest demand goods, marking them up and turning them around quickly to a public that becomes concerned when items are released and cannot be found immediately at the retail level. When the next wave of merchandise is released, the previous is all but forgotten as focus shifts the newer goods. By the time a third additional wave or series is released, the true value of the original items is revealed – a value based up desirability instead of popularity.

It is this value, the durable value of items once out of the population's eye of popularity, that this book reports. Less than investment grade conditioned items can be found for a lower street price. Professionally graded items have the ability to go for a higher price. Ultimately though, the calculation of a selling price of an item is definitely based upon the foundation of its historically recorded value.

Abbreviations and Acronyms

Over thirty years a small lexicon of interchangeable acronyms has evolved in the Star Wars collecting community. Especially common are the variations on movie title references for which no standard has ever been adopted.

For example: "EPI", "EPI: TPM", "EPI: The Phantom Menace", "Episode I", "Episode I: TPM", "Episode I: The Phantom Menace", and "The Phantom Menace" are all acceptable monikers for the same reference.

Other acronyms refer to events, locations, incarnations of the films, fictional time periods, and companies. Common abbreviations such as country names have been omitted from this list.

Evolution of Design

Separate titles for collectibles and toys.

This book is the next progression of The Star Wars Super Collector's Wish Book, which was published from 2001-2010 by Collector Books in Paducah, Kentucky. The fifth and final edition in that series weighed in at 464 pages and encompassed toys, collectibles, and memorabilia. This title continues that theme, varying only by splitting the collectibles and toys into separate books, giving each the needed space to continue expanding as the licensees produce record numbers of items to track, evaluate, and appraise.

Every edition incorporates and builds upon the previous editions with new layouts and different photo selections. This allows each book the ability to stand upon its own merit. Each book also contains unique focuses and features, providing owners of previous editions an expanded library of references to draw upon.

Organization of Items

Instead of pigeonholing every collectible into broad categories (ceramics, household, paper goods, etc.) where you may have to guess the location of every item, this book has all items listed alphabetically by their specific type.

If you want 'Guitars', look in "G". 'Toothbrushes'? Look in "T". There are a couple of logical exceptions. Bedding, Clothing, Dishes, and Jewelry are grouped together.

Taking the mystery out of the bracketed numbers.

To continue showing new, improved, or alternate images of collectibles from around the world, not every item or set that has been shown in previous editions has been included in the current edition. To aid readers, any item that has been pictured in previous editions of The Star Wars Super Collector's Wish Book that were not included in this edition will have a reference indicating the most recent edition and page number the photos appeared on. For example, on page 38, the 18" Episode III Mylar helium balloon by Party Express is not pictured in this edition. Its photo caption says (4:21) which indicates it can be seen in the fourth edition of The Star Wars Super Collector's Wish Book, page 21. Photos are referenced back to the first edition, as necessary.

Reference Photographs

Photographs in this guide are included solely for identification purposes and may not be reproduced. It is important to note that they are not in scale with one another. Completely different sized pieces may be printed next to each other and appear to be the same size. Photos should be viewed individually and not comparatively.

Designed to Survive the Internet

"Print is dead." "Information is free." These are the mantras of our time and by-and-large resound with the ring of truth. Where they tend to fall short is when expertise, detail, accuracy, completeness, coverage, and convenience are all required or desired.

The master database from which this series of books is compiled contains over 64,000 unique entries and the author has 54,000 photos of toys and collectibles including alternate angles and conditions. 12,800 of those photos are incorporated in this edition giving you access for education and identification immediately. As websites evolve, redesign, change hands, and expire, this book will forever be a durable and familiar reference. The charms of the guide are all of the obscure, limited edition, and international releases, which will never be found on a website's content, much less given an accurate appraisal when they are encountered by our readers in need of knowledge. (Who would blog about ten-year-old Star Wars china thimbles from the UK or powdered drink packets from Brazil?)

Beyond the Book

Don't stop exploring when you reach the last of the collectible listings on page 445. Every book ends with a section referred to as "becoming one with the Force" where other collectors and clubs share their own unique experiences with the Star Wars universe, and invite you to look into their worlds and activities. It's a reminder that while the films, television, and books may give us the basic stories, where we go with them, in our imaginations and with our own hands, has always been up to us.

Contributing

Geoffrey Carlton invites you to join the collecting conversation by sending in any information or photos that would help to fill in any gaps in listings or photography. The current list of contributors appears on page 447.

Autographs

Values listed are what the actual signature is worth on common items such as 8"x10" photographs or action figures. Up to $10 more should be added if the photograph is oversized (11"x14" or 16"x20").

Officially licensed photographs are preferred to non-licensed items. Significant deductions in value come into play if photos are grainy, out of focus, or obviously amateur such as a print from a screen capture. The licensed photos from Official Pix (www.OfficialPix.com) are regarded as the best quality and the more preferred for collectible value.

"Premium" signed items such as official one-sheet posters, should be considered more valuable if signed on more recent items; after 1995. Autographs on vintage posters may reduce value of the poster itself to non-autograph collectors.

The addition of a character name is preferable and may assist with resale, but does not affect value. Quotes or other messages do not affect value and should only be requested if the line was actually uttered by the character. Personalization of the autograph will usually deduct from the value of the signature, unless the actor is deceased.

Unique autograph products such as the Connoisseur Series from www.Wattographs.com are highly regarded for their rarity and will often accumulate value many times over their original cost. The Connoisseur Series of autographs are considered investment grade collectibles and not covered in this book. Please see <http://www.Wattographs.com> for more information.

Do you need "directory assistance" to figure out who's who in the galaxy of Star Wars autographs? Wattographs has provided an exhaustive listing of credits for every actor, writer, artist, animator, and crew member listed below. Turn to page ### for a convenient guide.

StarWars.com

In 2003 the official Star Wars website offered 13 themed galleries with approximately 12 images in each gallery. Fans could order calendars from an online merchandiser in a variety of formats. Considering the number of galleries, images available, and formats to choose from there are thousands of combinations which could have been individually produced.

Cards: TCG

The Trading Card Game (TCG) play decks were built from cards purchased in random booster packs. During the years the game enjoyed a large active community, values of individual cards varied depending on scarcity of the card and the amount of influence the card had to offer in stronger or popular play strategies.

The most desired cards used to have values of $10-$20 each with some of the rarest cards reaching nearly $100 in value. The common cards rarely rose above $0.10 to $0.25 each. The addition of foil chase cards increased some card values.

Since the development for the Trading Card Game has ended the value for the cards has plunged as only a core of dedicated gamers, and collectors who find the card art curious, has any interest.

Trading Card Game cards are often found at auction in large quantities and without specific card listings due to the hundreds of types of cards and card variations that exist.

A brief description of each set is provided here. At the time of this book's publishing, complete card set listings can be found at the manufacturer's website (www.Wizards.com) by performing a site search for "star wars tcg checklist".

CCG (Customizable Card Game)

CCG (Customizable Card Game)

Customizable card game decks were built from cards blindly purchased in random booster packs. During the years the game had a large active play group; values of individual cards varied depending on the scarcity of the card and amount of influence the card had to offer in stronger or popular play strategies.

Most of the desired cards had values of $10-20 each with some of the rarest cards reaching nearly $100 in value. The most common of the cards rarely exceeded $0.10 to $0.25 in value, each. The addition of foil highlights to chase cards increased card value in proportion to the value of the non-foil version of the card. The cards also enjoyed international release, allowing collectors to locate and treasure foreign cards for their set.

Since the development for the customizable card game ended, the value of the cards has dropped to only a fraction of the amount they used to command. Only a smaller core of gamers and collectors, who find the cards to be curious, have interest.

CCG cards are often found at auction in large quantities and without specific card listings due to the hundreds of cards and card variations that exist.

Collectors may pick up inexpensive cards as novelties. Gamers usually are willing to pay more, but only for specific cards they desire to complete a specific strategy for play.

A complete checklist for the CCG cards may be found in the second edition from page 135 to page 161 or online at www.StarWarsGuide.net/checklist.

About the Author

An Informal Chat With Geoffrey Carlton

When Geoffrey Carlton started documenting Star Wars collectibles, the task was much less daunting. There were only twenty years of products and of those the licenses had been dormant for close to half of that time. Fast forward to the second decade of the new millennium and the original 8,000 record spreadsheet, once kept on a Commodore 64 floppy disk, now contains over 63,000 records and continues to grow daily with archives on an 8GB flash drive. The original six column structure replaced by relational databases expanded to also track sales histories and auctions (dates, starting bid, high bid, reserve prices, buy-it prices, and closed without bid values by condition, region, and seller reputation).

"I was doing well, fooling myself into thinking some day I would have one of everything", muses Geoffrey. "That was before the multi-hundred dollar statues, replicas, and exclusive figures started showing up in the late 1990s. Don't get me wrong, I still acquire more than my share of the pieces I like. But I've decided that I'm not personally obligated to buy one of everything just because it has a logo on it."

Fortunately for Geoffrey, Star Wars fans from around the world share his desire to document and preserve the legacy. "When I go antiquing I find it difficult to imagine that Star Wars has ever been heard of in some of the smaller towns. Going through real five and dime shops I rarely ever see any Star Wars merchandise. Then I get home and in my email there are images of Star Wars comics in Hebrew sent in from Israel. Israel has a lot more going on at the moment than submitting Star Wars images, and yet here they are. Somebody there took the time to visually preserve their comics and sent them to me to share with others. One day I received some empty drink packets from Brazil. For somebody in Brazil to know who I am and get into contact with me directly is humbling. There are a lot of pieces of Star Wars merchandising internationally that you will never see come up on eBay. Star Wars fans care about the collecting community and deep down we all have a desire to be part of something greater. The book is a great outlet for that and it also gives people an opportunity to show off what they've got that others might not get to see otherwise. I'm thankful for those contributors and especially for the ones who maintain enough contact to get to become great friends. Brant, Stuart, and David."

There are new situations which arise without answer or precedent that the collecting community has to address and Geoffrey often encounters questions for his own opinion. "Vintage figures? Those were the original figures from 1978 through the Droid and Ewoks figures in 1985." Were they considered 'vintage' in 1990? "Well, no. In 1990 there were no other figures so they were just 'Star Wars figures'." The Power of the Force (POTF2) figures are sixteen years old. When will they be considered 'vintage'? "I don't think they'll ever receive that label. For the action figures the word vintage more reflects a series than an age. I do see some online auction seller referring to the '95-'99 figures as vintage. At some point the community as a whole will argue the standard and a consensus will be reached. Until then we all get to plead our own point of view. That's part of the fun of being part of an active community."

The collection room in Geoffrey's home is undergoing renovation. After twelve years of photographically heavy books, he's taking time to redocument his collection. "I'm still finding things buried in the hanger that got put away without ever getting photographed or detailed in the database. Scrolling through my photos I'm finding images which have fond memories of snapping photos with my original 'VGA camera' in the mid-1990s in my original collecting room. It's time to dust them off and give them the high-res photo treatment."

A final thought from Geoffrey as we close out this segment? "Going back to renovating the collection room... It's nice to get to touch everything again. Part of successful collecting is enjoying what you've got. My past decade has focused upon the thrill of the hunt. I'm fifteen years older than when I started this project and I've got a lot invested in this stuff. I plan to spend the next couple of years digging out and seeing what 'have to have it' treasures I bought that ended up just getting stashed away to be rediscovered. I won't relax on documenting new stuff. There would be no way to catch up! But right now I'm excited. The book is going well, collectibles of all kinds are coming out faster than they can be recorded, and Star Wars is still finding great new ways to make us use our imaginations. Without a doubt, right now life is good."

Contributors

If you read Star Wars books and magazines or visit the collectibles news sites, a couple of the names below will stand out as people who have established themselves as trusted experts in the community. Also contributing to this book are a combination of experts who walk quietly among us and collectors who took an interest in being a part of the project. Some of them sent in photography. Some chased down and reported values from auctions and sales. A couple of them filled in checklists which had previously had a couple of holes. Several reported items exclusive to their countries. It is amazing to learn how every one of them found a unique way to share their time and knowledge. What they have in common is that they all cared enough to do something to improve the documentation of Star Wars collectibles for me and for you. Please join me in honoring them for the endless facets and direction they have provided.

Growing Up Star Wars

by Victor Medina

I remember my first encounter with Star Wars toys. Like many other collectors of the Star Wars Generation, I regret not taking advantage of it.

It was late 1977, and I was a young kid walking through the toy section at the Red Bird Mall Sears in Dallas. I came across a display selling the fabled Early Bird Kit, the "empty box" that promised to send the buyer Star Wars figures at some future date. I was already a Star Wars fan, but I saw no point in buying an empty box and waiting months for action figures. What was the point of that?

The Early Bird kit – that got away...

I would eventually get my Star Wars figures, and along with my brothers Eddie and Michael, we became Star Wars fanatics. When Star Wars stopped playing at our nearby theaters, we went to see it at a drive-in that was showing it in Spanish. And we didn't even speak Spanish! It hardly mattered, since we knew all the words anyway.

I have many memories of my parents taking us to the mall or toy store in search of new Star Wars stuff. Looking back, I think that is the reason why Star Wars merchandise means so much to me. Star Wars became a point of connection in our family. There were Star Wars birthday parties and Halloween costumes, and Christmas always meant Star Wars goodies under the tree. In 1978, Eddie and I had our portraits taken together at Target - in our Star Wars t-shirts. My family claims I would play the Star Wars disco album on the record player and dance like a fool. I have no recollection of any such incident, and thankfully, there were no video cameras at the time, or I'd be a YouTube star right now.

As a kid, I readily wore out my Star Wars stuff. Among the few items that survived are my landspeeder, which is missing the windshield, seats, and at least one engine. Over the years, I did pick up some vintage pieces to fill in the holes of my collection, but I never replaced that landspeeder. I guess I just didn't want to let it go.

Had I known what all this stuff would be worth now, I would not have missed some golden opportunities. We once passed up an original Luke Skywalker in Stormtrooper disguise at a Toys R Us, because we were moving on to things like Transformers and G.I. Joe.

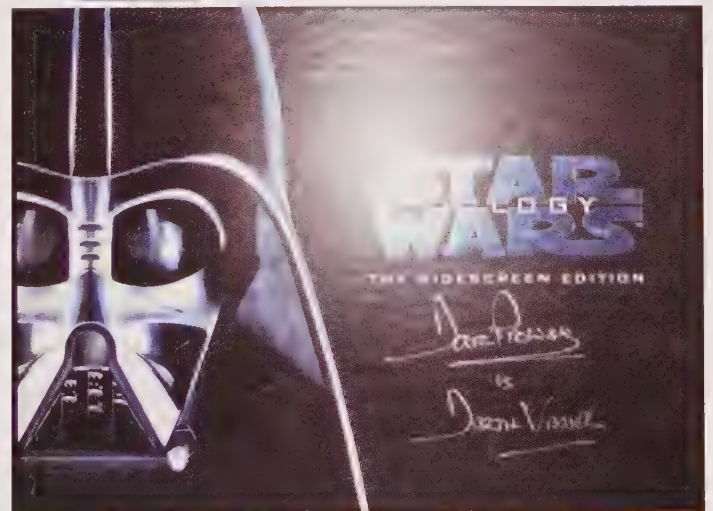

And then there was the time I was at the old Sears store in downtown Dallas, where I was disappointed that their toy section only had Jawa action figures. Dozens of them, all with that goofy vinyl cape. Kenner had already released new Jawas with cloth capes, which looked more realistic. I wanted a cloth cape Jawa, so I, as well as most other kids it turned out, never bought those vinyl caped ones. Had I been smarter, I would be writing this essay at my beach house in Hawaii.

When the Special Editions came out, I dove right back into Star Wars again, and I once again found myself appreciating the memories we were creating as much as the merchandise. When the Star Wars Special Edition opened, we took our four-year-old nephew Chris dressed up like a Jawa. When I look at the Theater Edition Luke Skywalker figure on my shelf, I remember standing in line with family and friends at the movies to get one, laughing and joking like it was 1983 again.

Looking at my old Star Wars stuff takes me back to a time long, long ago. I'm a kid again, my parents are still alive, and the Medina boys are saving the galaxy in our own back yard. I really value every piece of my Star Wars collection, I'm not ashamed to say. The memories attached to my collection, however, I treasure so much more.

Vintage Collecting: Trading Cards

1977 Japanese Star Wars Cards

By Paul Holstein

Scans from the collection of Paul Holstein

Contact: paul@jamesbondcards.com

My obsession started when I was 10 years old in 1977, when my father took me to see Star Wars at a local movie theater. I was blown away, it was literally a life changing experience. I went on to collect all of the Topps trading cards that year, although being a child I played with them and they were eventually discarded.

As an adult, I was at a Flea Market near my house one weekend and saw some of the original cards for sale. I took a look, and the memories came flooding back. I originally just wanted a few examples of the sets that I collected as a child. As my collection grew, I branched out to collecting all of the U.S. sets from 1977 - 1984 (the years that the movies were in theaters). I also have an interest in web design, so my website www.vintagestarwarscards.com became an extension of my collection. When I reached my goal of documenting and collecting all of the vintage U.S. sets, I eventually decided to collect worldwide.

I have written one other article on Star Wars trading cards, which appeared in the December 2005 issue of Sports Market Report. That article was a comprehensive look at vintage U.S. Star Wars cards, and is worth tracking down if you have an interest (the article is also reprinted on www.vintagestarwarscards.com). Sports Market Report is a monthly price guide published by PSA (Professional Sports Authenticator, the leader in professionally authenticated, encapsulated, and graded trading cards), and I also provided the pricing information for the Star Wars cards that they list prices for.

When asked to contribute to the Star Wars Super Collector's Wish Book, I was happy to continue what I started in SMR. In this article, due to space consideration, I am going to focus on vintage Japanese Star Wars trading cards (1977 sets only). If you enjoy this article and would like to see more, send an email to collector@starwarsguide.net and let them know! I think it would be great to make this a series of articles that, coupled with the original SMR article, documents every single vintage Star Wars card made, worldwide.

Other than U.S. Star Wars cards, Japanese Star Wars cards are the most collected. There are many reasons - with the main ones being the extreme high quality of the cards and the number of different sets produced. Many of the Japanese sets are full color, glossy, full bleed cards with stunning clarity. Many of the photos are not the same as on the U.S. cards, the distribution methods were different than the U.S. "wax packs", and several of the sets included variations or chase cards. The quantities produced were far less than the U.S. sets, and since they were distributed primarily in Japan - these can be some tough sets to track down for U.S. collectors. The first Japanese sets were produced by Yamakatsu, Takara, and Tokyo Queen. There is also a Menko set, which is in a category by itself, as well as a small sticker set made by Meiji.

I'm going to start with the standard size Yamakatsu set, because it is one of my personal favorites.

These were originally produced as a box set. The cardboard box would contain 50 cards in individual blue paper packets, two embossed card holders, several "winner" cards, and several large two-sided "prize" cards in sealed envelopes. The winner cards can be differentiated from the regular cards by Japanese lettering having been stamped on the backs in red. Kids would buy the cards in the blue packets - and if a winner card was found, it could be traded for one of the oversized "prize" cards. There are a total of 36 cards in the set (not numbered), and due to the distribution of the cards in the boxes it usually takes several box sets to complete one full set of 36. Some other notable things about this set include the fact that the backs will many times have a blue tint from the blue paper packets that they came in - this is not considered to be a flaw by collectors. Also, many of the winner cards (collecting a winner card complete set is extremely difficult, a task that I have not yet completed myself) will have a line drawn through the back indicating that it was turned in for a prize. A complete unopened box set will usually run $500 or more, and individual cards are generally around $10 each in mint condition. Professionally graded cards from the set in PSA 9 (MINT) or PSA 10 (GEM MINT) can go for much more.

Yamakatsu, under a licensing agreement with Topps, produced a second set in 1977. This set was also 36 full-color cards, but this time they had a white border and were postcard sized. Thirty-one of the photos on the large set match the photos on the standard set, but the standard set has five cards with drawings that are replaced with additional photos in the oversized set. This set could be purchased in one of two ways – cello packs in a hanging display, or via gamble books. The cello packs were individual packs, containing multiple cards, and came in a large display to be hung on the wall. The cello was clear, so the cards could be viewed through the packaging. The gamble books were completely different. In the gamble books, the cards were bound in a small folder with each card completely hidden inside a blue paper packet. Within the gamble books, there were three “winner cards” that, if found, could be exchanged for a prize. Both the gamble books and the hanging displays have odd distributions of the cards, so it would take a few of each to make a complete set. I personally came across a lot of several gamble books, that produced partial sets missing all the same cards – and where all of the gamble books had the same three winner cards inside. Hanging displays containing around 30 packs can run $100 - $200, full unopened/unsearched gamble books can run from $75 - $100, and complete NM/MINT sets of all 36 cards usually go for around $75.

Another of my very favorite sets is the Takara puzzle card set. The cards themselves aren’t puzzles, the packs of cards were distributed in actual 108-piece puzzles made by the company Takara. There were eight different puzzles, where each of the eight puzzles contained a small paper packet of five cards (the packet would be stapled closed).

The cards are slightly oversized as compared to regular U.S. trading cards, are numbered on the back from 1 - 40, and the card descriptions on the backs are in Japanese. A full listing of which card numbers can be found in which puzzles, and the translation for the text on the reverse of the cards, can be found at www.vintagestarwarscards.com. The puzzles sell for around $100 each, making the cost of a complete 40 card set around $800. As singles, the cards normally sell for $10 - $20 each – but they come up for sale very infrequently so building a set that way would be nearly impossible.

The Tokyo Queen set is another that is very difficult to complete. It’s unclear whether or not these were supposed to be collected as a set, but collectors do consider them one. There were four small notebooks made by Tokyo Queen, and each notebook contained eight different cards (a full set is 32 cards). Each subset (from each different tri-fold notebook) has a different colored border – so the cards are categorized that way (red border subset, black border subset, light blue border subset, and dark blue border subset). This is another oversized set, not numbered, with the text in Japanese. I have paid as much as $100 each for an unused notebook complete with the cards.

Most trading card collectors also consider any sticker sets to be valid trading cards sets as well. In this category, a company called Meiji produced a set of 30 lick-and-stick stickers (the size of postage stamps) that were distributed with choco-balls candy. This set is especially popular with collectors that favor food premiums. $10 each is a common price to pay for these, if you can find them.

And finally, there are the Menko cards. These were probably not licensed in many cases, and were made as a part of a children’s game. There was a set made for Star Wars, and I have seen versions on extra-thick cardboard as well as lighter stock cardboard. Both would come in sheets (of 16 cards) originally, comprised of two complete 8-card sets. The most current prices that I have seen range from $100 - $150 for a sheet, although a single high grade set of all 8 cards hand-cut and professionally graded by PSA sold recently for $750.

R2-D2 Builders Club

Build a Life-size Replica of R2-D2

By Guy Vardaman
Member, the R2-D2 Builders Club

The R2-D2 Builders Club, founded in 1999 by Dave Everett, brings like-minded individuals together for a common goal -- building their own personal astromech, as seen in the Star Wars saga.

Disney's R2 droid, built by member Daniel Deutsch for the Disney parks, R2-KT built by members to honor the memory of the 501st's Katie Johnson, and an actual ILM R2-D2. Taken at Star Wars Celebration IV in Los Angeles.

We are an international internet-based group, with over 7000 members in at least 14 countries, utilizing the web as a common means to gather information, ask questions, share thoughts, and discuss ideas for building robots of varying functionality.

Speaking the same language is helpful when constructing a droid. Online and printed materials are available to help get you started.

The group is very open and members are encouraged to express their views and share results of their work with the larger group.

With members from such diverse backgrounds there are talents and perspectives that greatly enrich the building experience. Members start out building with materials and tools they are familiar with but will often learn of new and different ways of achieving the same task.

The droids themselves are built from virtually any material: wood, styrene, PVC, aluminum, steel, resin, fiberglass and combinations thereof as well as found objects and recycled parts from surplus stores, auto junk yards, and aircraft scrap yards.

Plans and specifications from actual screen-used props are available to members online.

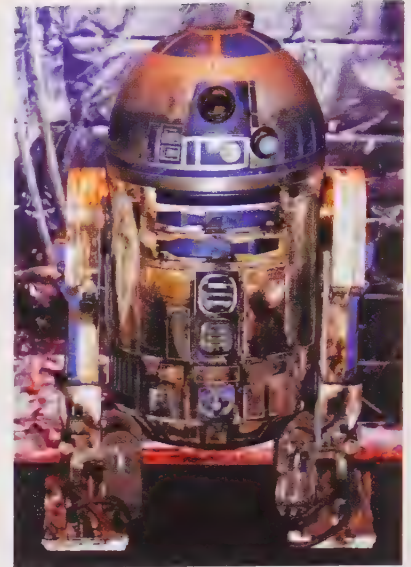

These plans also insure that members from anywhere in the world can make a part that is compatible with a part made by another builder, so they can share and trade parts and resources with each other.

While building their own droid and sharing experiences, many members have made great personal friendships and learned valuable real world building techniques as well as the use of tools they might have otherwise never encountered.

People take great pride in accomplishing a finished droid and, to date, hundreds of members have attended events (with and without droids) for charities, entertainment, and educational purposes. Some simply go to share the fruit of their labor.

More sophisticated models can do things that the robots in the movies were unable to do (unassisted) such as transition from three-legged mode to two legs and back, drive under radio control, play sound effects, eject various functional appendages, spray a fire extinguishing mist or scan for life forms!

Some of these robots employ highly sophisticated real-world technology such as Wi-Fi command,

This astromech appearing to be the brave R2-D2 on Dagobah, is actually posing for photos while his builder / operator takes a moment to chat with others about the people they can meet when they join the R2-D2 Builders Club microprocessor-controlled boards, custom programming, sensors, rudimentary voice-recognition and safety fail-safes.

These droids can range in weight from 50 to 250 pounds and are usually larger than people expect, so the construction is not for the faint of heart!

Depending on the materials used, the construction can also be costly. Building a replica droid out of cardboard and papier-mâché will obviously cost far less than one that is made from custom-machined aluminum and steel parts. The club founder has created plans expressly for building a replica out of styrene sheets, by hand, for a few hundred dollars.

Finding something to craft the 18" diameter dome from is always one of the greatest challenges, so you can start measuring your salad bowls, lamps and barbecues even before logging on to:

<http://www.astromech.net> -or-
<http://movies.groups.yahoo.com/group/r2builders>

It is an extremely rewarding, occasionally life changing experience and is especially recommended for parents and their children.

These may look like Hasbro's latest offerings for a Build-a-Droid toy set, but they're not. Every one of them is a 1:1 scale astromech; most with motorized mechanical skills and electronic features. Ready to build your own? The R2 Builders Club invites you to read through the online information and join the club! (Membership is free.)

Star Wars Costuming

Star Wars Costuming

At some point it's likely that you've seen people dressed up as their favorite characters from Star Wars. Costumes for Halloween, both store bought and crafted together, are not uncommon. Movie premieres, conventions, and parades usually draw their share of excited fans, ready to strike a pose for a photo or two.

The costuming phenomena goes beyond finding clothes that resemble those of primary characters. Realistic and accurate costume accessories are now available through costume and party shops. For fans who want to go that extra mile, there are also hobbyist prop sites who offer tutorials and component parts to build your own costuming weapons and detail items.

The choice of costumes in the mainstream include background characters and creatures throughout the film saga, television shows, books, video games, and comics.

One of the first considerations when purchasing, sewing, or constructing a costume is your body type. A six foot tall person could dress in a movie accurate Ewok costume and true fans would immediately recognize their effort. That person should be prepared though to be mistaken by many for a large aggressive teddy bear. Characters such as the Ewoks, Jawas, Ugnaughts, and Yoda are better portrayed by either children or else adults with less height.

(That doesn't mean that a 10-year-old cannot be a wookiee. Children's costuming, recognized as such, allows many of the adult costuming barriers to be tossed out the window. With that in mind, we will continue with the adult costumer in mind...)

Costumes which completely cover your identity whether with masks, hoods, helmets, or makeup work well for costumers who might otherwise be too shy to show up in fancy dress or for more anonymous characters who might be showing up in multiples. When constructing and wearing these costumes, it is important not to sacrifice the safety of being able to see and breath freely in case you end up in costume for long hours at a time.

If you choose to costume as a recognizable character, consider ones whom you might resemble the most. Natural looks go a long way towards the believability of the costume. For those who find that they don't really resemble any of their favorite characters, don't fret about it too much. As with the child Wookiee example, a good costume is all that is needed to accomplish your goal.

Once you're immersed in costuming, the next phase is to consider your commitment to people enjoy a complete wardrobe of garb for many different characters, while others concentrate on perfecting the looks and developing a few key characters. An advantage to single character costuming is the depth of detail which can be accomplished by staying in a character's persona and choice of clothing.

Since detail costuming often relies on accessories for level of completeness, choice of costumes should take the cost of accessories into account when deciding. Jedi, for instance, are perfectly believable without an electronic lightsaber. Investing in one as an upgrade if you continue in a Jedi role will further enhance all Jedi-based outfits.

Often costumes are constructed based upon budget and then upgraded as desire and dedication to character grow. An acceptable Zam Wesell bounty hunter helmet can be built for around $40. For the dedicated Zam who wants to be movie-accurate the pieces to construct the helmet can run a couple of hundred dollars. Often Zam costumers start with an affordable basic costume to decide whether or not Zam is right for them, and then if they stick with her, modifications and additions are made over a period of years.

The internet is a valuable resource for costumers of all levels. There are online tutorials and forums for sewing, patterns, reference material, foam sculpting, vacuuumforming, detailing, props, weapons, and more! The odds are good that if you want to costume as a character or creature, somebody has already done it at least once and posted either photos of the costume or else their own blogged how-to.

If you cannot find already posted information on a costume you'd like to make, a couple of well placed posts in the community forums will put you into contact with people who, if they haven't already done it will at least have some ideas for you to explore when figuring out how to make the costume yourself.

To progress past the Star Wars event-level costuming there are clubs and communities with international membership which have formed to meet others with similar interests in costuming. These organizations often come together at local conventions and contribute their presence to charity events and parades.

Many of the groups are broken up by costume type - good guys, bad guys, jedi, mercenaries, etc. People with costumes that either crossover boundaries or have multiple costumes qualifying for different groups often belong to several.

As much about socializing as costuming, every get-together is a reason to discuss costume modifications and upcoming events. Groups will interact with each other, giving the general public a chance to see every aspect of Star Wars costuming in one location.

The Jedi Assembly

www.TheJediAssembly.com

Organized: 2002 by Anthony Foister
Membership: Over 700
Costumes: Jedi - light side only

The Jedi Assembly is an online fan-based group for Star Wars Jedi costuming enthusiasts. To join you must be at least 18 and have an approved Jedi costume with a full-length picture to be reviewed for approval. Non-members may join the message boards which offer great tips and ideas on creating your own Jedi costume. In general the red saber color usually connotes the image of the Sith and therefore will not be allowed. (Red lightsaber exceptions based on specific character costumes may be requested.) Jedi costumes do not have to represent an existing or established character. Original Jedi costumes that are constructed within light-side guidelines are welcome.

Rebel Legion

www.RebelLegion.com

Organized: 1999 by Tony Troxell
Membership: Over 3,500
Costumes: Good Guys, Fringe, Creatures, Troops, Jedi

The Rebel Legion is an international Star Wars costuming organization created by, of, and for people interested in creating costumes from the Star Wars mythos. Research, create, build, and improve costumes in a place where costumers with similar passions share skills, tips, and ideas. Jedi, Rebel Pilots, Troopers, Princesses, and even Wookiees... they have got them all... and are always looking for more. Besides their 'Good Guy' costumes, the worldwide membership often choose to give back to communities (through costumed volunteer activities and charity events). The Rebel Legion provides the public with a great range of Star Wars costumes, and a personable, interactive, face to face experience.

The Dented Helmet

www.TheDentedHelmet.com

Organized: around 2002
Membership: Over 9,000 for costuming and prop making
Costumes: Boba Fett, Jango Fett, Zam Wesell, Clone Troops

The Dented Helmet (TDH) is a free online discussion forum and information archive specifically designed to help fans build high quality replica costumes of their favorite Star Wars based characters like Boba Fett, Jango Fett, Zam Wesell, and even Clone Troopers! Designed for both the first timer and the seasoned convention costumer, TDH is a family-friendly community resource to provide assistance necessary for any skill level of fan to achieve their costuming goals. If you've got passion for Boba Fett or Star Wars bounty hunters, the artistry and history behind their costumes, as well as a desire to see them brought to life by your own hands, then you sound like their 'kind of scum'!

Mandalorian Mercs

mercs.firespray.net

Organized: 2007
Membership: Over 350
Costumes: Mandalorian style armor

The Mandalorian Mercs is the world's premier custom Mandalorian costume organization. With 35 chapters in 7 countries, the Mercs grew rapidly from a small core of members to now over 350 across the globe. Their goal is to provide a nexus for Mandalorian costumers, giving them a collective identity and representation within the Star Wars costuming community. Prospective members are encouraged to be creative while staying within the club's costuming standards. Members take pride in the ability to assist both novice and veteran costumer alike, and have an extensive library of resources and an active and helpful forum to direct costuming efforts.

501st Legion (Vader's Fist)

www.501st.com

Organized: 1997 by Albin Johnson
Membership: Over 5,000 members with 7,600 costumes
Costumes: Empire, Bounty Hunters, Sith Lords, Aliens

The 501st Legion spreads the magic of the Star Wars genre worldwide through its authentic-looking costumes, and has become the leading force in fan-based charity events. Also known as "Vader's Fist," the 501st is truly dedicated to brightening the lives of those less-fortunate. While recognized by the inclusion of the 501st name in official Star Wars material such as books and video games, the 501st is not affiliated with Lucasfilm -- the 501st Legion is a volunteer fan organization. The costumes are the result of careful research, fabrication, and a lot of hard work. The majority of costume components are hand built.

At Home with Star Wars

At Home with Star Wars

Star Wars has one again crept out of the children's bedroom and back into the main part of the home, with Mom and Dad getting to play, without looking too nerdy.

Williams-Sonoma produced several first-time offerings with a number of different cutter products for the kitchen. Beyond the obvious cookie cutters, they also released a set of sandwich cutters, a pack of shaped pancake molds, and an apron sized for children.

The Star Wars Shop kept the baking theme going with a space slug oven mitt, complete with Millennium Falcon caught in mid-escape. They too had a release of aprons, this time in adult sizes. For casual cooking there is a slave Leia apron, and for back yard barbecuing there is a Darth Vader apron. (Be careful around those flames... especially if you don't have the High ground!)

Speaking of Mustafar... the Star Wars Shop also sold this counter top toaster. More than just a logo on the side of the appliance, when you toast your breakfast bread, an image of Darth Vader is crisped right into your toast! Very appropriate, from a certain point of view.

In Japan, Kotobukiya has been manufacturing Star Wars chop stick sets for several years. They are finally available through a couple of U.S. based companies for families who don't want to order from overseas. The handle/blade combinations are character accurate. At this time you can purchase Darth Vader, Darth Maul, Luke Skywalker, and Yoda, or two packs with Darth Vader / Yoda and Luke Skywalker / Yoda. The Yoda chop sticks are not as long as the others, making them ideal for children or people with smaller hands who may some difficulty negotiating the longer sets. Several of the sets come with translucent Star Wars logoed chopstick rests. Consumer electronics have seen their share of Star Wars merchandise designed for use anywhere around the house. These character lamps by Funko do much more than light up a room. Universal MP3 speakers are built in along with digital clocks. (For use in the bedroom, the clocks also have alarms built in.)

Funko started their electronics line with character flash drives before moving into the audio market. Their latest move is with a set of character folding headphones and padded DJ stereo headphones.

Think Geek found a solution to all of those Wampa pelts just laying around. Now you can have your own 'Wampa-skin rug' in your living room or den. At over five feet long, this area rug is made from quality synthetic fur, so no Wampas were actually harmed in the production of this family heirloom.

The Think Geek collection started with this adult-sized sleeping bag which is 67" long, not including the head or legs! The concept started out as an April Fools Days joke on their website, but the prank received such an overwhelming number of pre-orders that Think Geek pursued the project. Owners of the sleeping bag were treated to the first ever TaunTaun (sleeping bag) races at the Star Wars Celebration V in Orlando Florida in 2010.

A late entry into the "Star Wars in the Home" category is by Black Milk in Australia. This shapely R2-D2 one-piece adult swim suit is made from white lycra and is designed to not be see-through when it gets wet.

Wrapping up the 'at home' line up, we go back to Star Wars Shop who produced this resin Jawa garden gnome. Star Wars has seen outdoors products in the way of sporting goods and lawn sprinklers, but this is the first ornamental garden piece so far. Whether he stands guard over your tomatoes or greets guests on your front porch, the little guy seems to be saying, "You are welcome here! This is a Star Wars home."

Our Star Wars Memories

By Sonia Mara Adame

I was seven years old when Star Wars was first released. My brother was three. Our parents drove us 60 miles into Los Angeles so we could see it at the Cinerama Dome, the biggest and best screen around. (This was before IMAX!) At the time I wondered why my dad made such a big deal, why we drove so far, waited in a line that went around the block, all on opening weekend. It wasn't until we walked out of the theater that I understood.

We all have our first memory of Star Wars. For years afterward my brother and I and all the kids in the neighborhood fought over who got to be Luke, Leia, Han, and Chewie. Now as adults we have introduced our love for the series to a new generation: our kids. And with the invention of the digital camera we have hundreds of photos capturing THEIR love for all of these great characters.

That is why Creative Imaginations believed in a Star Wars themed scrapbook line. Our Star Wars memories are so vivid, and now, more than 30 years after the first movie, there are more memory-making opportunities involving the Star Wars series than ever. Halloween and themed birthday parties are the most obvious. Star Wars: Where Science Meets Imaginations, Star Wars in Concert, meeting characters of the 501st Garrisons, Star Tours, midnight movie screenings, Comic-Cons and Fan Days.

Besides the big events, there are the little moments: Opening presents during family holidays, being glued to the TV watching Clone Wars, getting your first action figure, building an amazing LEGO™ vehicle, bonding with your child over the first Star Wars film you fell in love with. Capturing these photo opportunities and preserving our personal history and passions for future generations are what scrapbooking is all about.

Mothers and wives of fans, as well as the female super fan, are the women who continually asked for our product to be Star Wars themed. They not only want to capture the images of their family members dressed as the characters, but to capture the true essence of the themes in the Star Wars story. Of a son finding his own way in the world, of perseverance and team work, of good triumphing over evil. All of these life lessons are the moments we want to capture and put in our scrapbooks.

The Star Wars scrapbooking collections are not just for scrapbooking, they are about exercising your creative muscles. The fun paper designs, cool stickers, and amazing embellishments can be used to add Star Wars to everyday items like frames, lunch bags, book covers, note cards, gifts, and so much more. We've included a project you can make to display your creative side and your love for Star Wars.

Page 8: Cut a 5 1/2" x 9 3/4" panel from "Fighter" Paper from Star Wars Kit. Trim off corners and attach to the back side of page 7. Cut a 1 1/2" x 5 1/2" strip from "Beware the dark side" paper. Attach the strip to the top portion of the page, approximately 1" from top edge. Cut a 1/8" strip from black cardstock and edge the "dark side" panel. Using foam squares, attach a "Fighter Squadron" chipboard piece to the top of page, as shown.

Page 9: Cut a 5 1/2" x 9 3/4" panel from "Star Wars" Paper from Star Wars Kit. Trim off corners and attach to a page from Conrad Book. Cut a 1 1/2" x 5 1/2" strip from "Beware the dark side" paper. Attach the strip 3/4" from the bottom edge of page. Cut 1/8" strip from black cardstock and edge the "dark side" strip. Using foam squares, attach a Storm Trooper chipboard piece to the

Page 10: Cut a 5 1/2" x 4 3/4" panel from "Darth Vader" Paper from Star Wars Kit, as shown. Cut a 5" x 5 1/2" panel from "Beware the dark side" Paper from Star Wars Kit. Trim off bottom corners of "dark side" panel and attach to the bottom portion of Conrad Book page.

Page 11: Trim off top corners of "Darth Vader" Paper and attach to top portion of page. Attach "Who's Your Jedi Master?" sticker to a White Canvas panel and trim into a rectangular panel. Lay the panel over the back side of a "Darth Vader" chipboard piece and attach foam squares along three sides of the panel. Attach the "Darth Vader" chipboard piece to the bottom left corner of the page and slide the "Jedi Master" panel under the chipboard piece, as shown.

Back cover: Cut a 5 1/2" x 9 3/4" panel from X-Wing Paper, cutting the portion with the fighters, as shown. Attach the panel to the back side of page 11. Cut a 2 1/2" x 5 1/2" panel from red "May the force be with you" Paper from Star Wars Kit. Cut a 2 3/4" x 5 1/2" panel from White Canvas Paper. Layer the red panel with the white panel to the bottom portion of the page, as shown. Using foam squares, attach a Star Wars chipboard piece to the red panel. Attach a "Rebel" epoxy, a "Luke Skywalker" sticker to the page. Cut apart the "May the force be with you" border sticker and attach to page, as shown.

Finishing touches: Punch a hole in a few of the remaining Star Wars Chipboard Pieces and place between pages. Place binder rings through holes in the Star Wars Chipboard pieces and Conrad Book pages. Close the binder rings.

Sayville, NY 11782

JUL 09 2012

Over 24,000 items with checklist-style listings, over 12,000 color photos, and accurate estimated values make this collector's guide a must-have for everybody who has ever owned merchandise produced for the Star Wars™ saga or who is selling or buying it now. Items have been collected from over 50 countries and compiled together into this impressive tome, the latest version of the longest running Star Wars identification guide series ever in print. This new edition covers the range from Advertising and Dart Boards to Squeaky Toys and Window Clings, everything, that is, except toys—a category so large it will now comprise its own book. From the 1976 pre-release movie paperback through the latest Clone Wars kitchenware, thirty-five years of exciting and obscure Star Wars collectibles are archived here for you to discover, marvel over, and enjoy.
